

EUROPE DOES NOT FALL

Posted on 10/02/2016 by Naider

We do not know if the confidence in the economic recovery of the euro zone will end up reaching our pockets in some way, the only thing we can affirm is that the European Commission maintains the indicator that analyzes the confidence that the markets have at its maximum level in the euro with an average of 106.1 points.

As far as Spain is concerned, the European Commission has highlighted the latest macro data obtained to increase its score by two decimal points, driven, above all, by the improvement in the services sector, construction, retail trade and consumers , while it got worse in the industry.

Countries like Germany or France have kept their external confidence ratio constant while in countries like the Netherlands and Italy, like the aforementioned Spain, it has risen considerably.
