

#NAIDERCOP21: THE PARIS AGREEMENT, NOT SO MUCH, NOT SO LITTLE

Posted on 15/12/2015 by Naider

On Saturday, November 13, Laurent Fabius announced the end of the summit and the successful signing of what will henceforth be known as the "Paris Agreement". Since then, official statements, press releases, reviews and articles have scrutinized the body of the agreement, and the reactions could not have been more diverse.

From the "historic agreement" and "radical change of discourse" announced by the ministers at the Bourget on Saturday night, to the absolute despair and the "global failure" and "diplomatic scam" that has been announced by numerous activist groups: the reactions could not have been more diverse, disparate and opposed. Couldn't it be that between these black and white perceptions, reality lies somewhere on the gray spectrum?

Let's start by reviewing the strengths of the deal:
