

SOCIAL NETWORKS, ANOTHER FORM OF INTIMACY

Posted on 26/12/2014 by Naider

We present the video that Jason Silva (television personality , Venezuelan filmmaker, philosopher and thinker) has posted on his YouTube channel Shots of Awe. Well-known video blogger who talks about environmental privacy, a concept he uses to describe the type of privacy that emerges on social networks.

Social networks are receiving more and more criticism on the grounds that people do not tell their true intimacy but what each one wants to project about himself. Silva believes that what is really being transmitted is what he calls ambient privacy, providing us with bits of the digital lives of family and friends that need not be less authentic. A different space for communication, neither better nor worse, that breaks the barriers of time and space to expand our horizons.

There are no comments yet.