

THE LESS FIERCE COUGAR

Posted on 17/11/2015 by Naider

Environmental awareness is gradually taking over not only society but also companies, as a sign of its commitment to sustainability, the company Puma has built the first fully-fledged sports venue in a small town in southern Germany. "green".

The German company has opted for new technologies to manage its new building, taking innovative measures such as:

1- Building automation and control systems that allow the building to self-regulate its lighting in the event that the construction itself assesses that there is an unnecessary use of energy

2- The building is capable of storing heat and cold and regulating the internal temperature with its own energy reserves

3- All the energy used by this building comes from fully renewable resources and the carbon footprint left by the company's activity is offset by environmental projects in Turkey.

There are no comments yet.