Our colleague Aitor Mingo, environmental scientist at Naider who leads urban and territorial sustainability projects, was interviewed as an expert on the Por fin programme on Onda Cero radio.

During the interview, Aitor reflected on the importance of deploying climate shelter networks in our cities to help us cope with increasingly intense summer heatwaves. These shelters are vital for safeguarding the health of the most vulnerable citizens, while also offering an opportunity to rethink urban design in favour of more resilient and sustainable models.

You can hear Aitor's interview from 2:30:23 onwards:
